

Exorcise Halloween

by

Matthew Feeney

It's time to admit we've become too damn politically correct in the good ole US of A. We're too soft on crime. Sex offenders are now calling themselves "victims" because they're being left out of major prison reforms. Well I say "Boo-Hoo!" because sex offenders who knowingly broke the law need to pay the full penalties for their horrific crimes. You know the old saying: "If you can't do the time, don't do the crime."

Florida recently instituted criminal justice reforms by allowing felons to vote. Thankfully, this new law judiciously excludes sex offenders and murderers. Can you imagine the state of this country if we allowed sex offenders to vote? There are so many of them, they could band together and vote to change existing laws, decriminalizing and advocating their immorality. We've seen this happen in the past when we allow minority groups to vote.

It started with Negroes first being allowed to vote in 1870, but at least that was limited to only include Black men. Then women somehow managed to sneak out of the kitchen long enough to get the 19th amendment passed in 1920. Shortly thereafter, the felony laws prohibiting interracial marriages were abolished. Now even homos can marry. Where does this craziness end? It won't unless we stop those sort of people from voting.

We need to return to our roots. A society based on the Holy Bible and good ole fashioned common sense. Every educated and full-blooded American knows the Bible forbids homosexuality, but did you know there are over 100 verses in the Bible that not only condone, but actively support slavery? Even the original writers of the United States Constitution only counted a Colored Person (that's what they used to call Blacks) as 5/8 a real person. There were many good reasons interracial marriages were illegal for so many years, and those are the same reasons we need to keep sex offenders from voting.

In Minnesota, inmates convicted of sex crimes are sensibly precluded from any programs they would take advantage of to reduce their sentence. Sex offenders are specifically excluded from Work Release, the Challenge Incarceration Program (CIP) and even transferring to Minimum Security prison facilities. Unfortunately, Minnesota still allows Hispanics and Left-Handed offenders into these programs, thus allowing special interest groups to learn important life skills while earning a reduced sentence.

Minnesota requires most incarcerated sex offenders to attend special psychological treatment programs. Giving treatment to sex offenders is a colossal waste of tax-payer dollars. Why try to fix someone who clearly doesn't want to be fixed and had so much fun breaking the law? That would be as stupid as using Narcan to save the life of a druggie who overdosed. Why perpetuate this vicious cycle? Let Darwin's law be the rule of the land.

Minnesota has gone a step better to protect American Families than building a concrete Border Wall – they have worked around the pesky constraints of the Constitution to allow the civil commitment of sex offenders AFTER they served their criminal sentence. This innovative and clever legal theory is based on the same precept as Tom Cruise's Hollywood movie Minority Report, where the only thing better than solving a crime is preventing a future crime. Even though the criminal penalties in Minnesota for sex offenders are already among the most severe in the country, the sad fact is that no matter how long a sex offender's sentence is, eventually that sentence is served and the state is forced to release these perverts back into society where they are free to once again prey on innocent women, children and pets.

The State of Minnesota found the best way to plug this glaring hole was by pursuing civil commitment. After the reprobate finishes his criminal prison sentence, he can be civilly detained for the rest of his life. Locking them up for crimes they will probably commit (before they commit them) is the only way to completely ensure a 0% recidivism rate. Since it's technically illegal to kill 'em, the least we can do is make sure these sex offenders never get out.

There is a special statistical test called the Static-99 given to sex offenders that accurately assesses a higher risk level for gay sex offenders than for normal straight sex offenders. This is because even while locked up in prison, homo-offenders cause huge problems and devastation by perverting on other innocent felons. While drugs and weapons need to be discreetly smuggled into prison, queer perverts can walk right into prison proudly dangling their weapons of destruction between their legs. Just like in real life, these fags then actively recruit unwitting straight victims into their gay lifestyle, thus perpetuating the vicious cycle.

Sex offender advocates and bleeding-heart liberals often cite the "fact" that sex offenders have the lowest recidivism rate among criminals. That can't be true, because it's a fact that the largest single element in determining an offender's successful reintegration back into society is their support network. The State does everything possible to reduce a sex offender's support by assigning a special risk level for sex offenders and subjecting them to Intensive Supervised Release (ISR). The State requires them to wear GPS ankle bracelets and has restrictions on where perverts live and work. The creeper's photo, address and personal information is published in their town newspaper and broadcast on the local news and placed on special Sex Offender Registry Websites that anyone with Internet access can search. These special rules and restrictions help publically shame the sex offender and create instability and guarantee high recidivism rates, ensuring they are quickly returned to prison. With the State investing so much time and money to keep those recidivism rates as high as possible, clearly any claims of "low" recidivism rates must be Fake News.

There should be zero second chances. It takes strong moral fortitude to avoid committing a crime in the first place. Only those of weak moral character fail. Will power and prayer can fix anything. Ask any smoker or overweight person – if they relapse and smoke or overeat again, that is their own fault. Likewise, sex offenders need to be accountable for their actions and realize because they've failed once, no matter what they say or do, they will fail again. They are doomed to repeat their mistake over and over. It is simpler and safer to just keep them permanently locked up no matter the cost.

Think of the precious tax dollars wasted on due process. The State does not allow sex offenders on social media like Facebook, but this needs to go even farther – don't allow sex offenders to read newspapers or own phones since they often use these tools to commit their heinous crimes. Most sex offenders aren't allowed Internet access or to shop at certain grocery stores. This is a good start – it reminds me of the "Whites Only" drinking fountains in the south back in the day. We have laws requiring sex offenders to register their vehicles and properties – but why do we even allow them to own vehicles, especially panel vans?

Statistics show the majority of United States prison population is minorities. This means Black, Hispanic and probably some Indians thrown in for good luck. Statistics don't lie. These are the people ignorant enough to disobey the laws of the country and stupid enough to get caught. Similarly, statistics show that predicting the odds of a sexual pervert re-offending are as accurate as the odds of guessing a Super Bowl winner. If released sex offenders claim they can follow the law, we need to create additional new rules and restrictions just for sex offenders to follow. If we watch someone long enough and keep shuffling their rules, we'll eventually catch them doing something wrong.

Halloween is an especially favorite time for insidious sex offenders. Law enforcement in Georgia met the issue head-on in 2018 by requiring all registered sex offenders to post special warning signs on their residence doors on Halloween. A Scarlet Letter of Safety. It is for the public good and it was obviously effective, as evidenced by the fact that there were zero reports of any kidnappings or molestations in those Georgia Counties that Halloween. In 2019 those whiny sex offenders filed a lawsuit claiming this procedure was "embarrassing and unconstitutional." Who cares? How dare convicted sex offenders try to hide behind our nation's most sacred document, the U.S. Constitution.

One of the problems is that sex offenders blend in so easily. Muslims have the courtesy to wear special handkerchiefs and turbans so we know to keep an eye on them, especially around the holidays. We should erect special warning signs on the lawns of local Jews around Christmas time so we don't accidentally offend anyone by wishing them a "Merry Christmas" and remind us to always use the uber-politically correct non-denominational "Happy Holidays."

I recently read a statistic that there were over 750,000 registered sex offenders in the United States, and that number is growing exponentially. That number only represents those who have been stupid enough to be bagged and tagged. With ever more and more high-profile celebrities like Kevin Spacey, Harvey Weinstein, R. Kelly, Senator Al Franken, Jeffrey Epstein, John Travolta and Bill Cosby accused of sex crimes, they add credibility and legitimacy to the swelling ranks of sex offenders. Bill Clinton and Donald Trump are showing that acting out is easy to get away with, so now sex offending has become the hip and cool thing to do.

It's just a matter of time before sex offenders (caught and uncaught) become the majority in this country. Just like the previous "minority" groups of Blacks, women, homos, Muslims and trannies, once sex offenders are allowed to vote, they'll be seeking the same rights and privileges as every other commonplace felon who thinks they have served their time.

God help America.

DISCLAIMER:

The author is an openly gay man and a convicted felon currently serving an "indeterminate" sentence for sexual misconduct with minor males.

He recently received a rejection notice from a publisher stating this essay violated their "Anti-Hate" policies. He thought the original title "Another Modest Proposal") would give away that this is a satirical essay and ALL of the preposterous views articulated herein were intended to be inanelly absurd hyperboles in an attempt to make a point. Maybe the new title will help.

It's a sad state of current affairs when our world is so out of whack that the ridiculously extremist views satirically expressed herein are not instantly perceived as outlandish, irrational and absurd. God Help America indeed...

